Unofficial Chaplain

While this may not seem to be a big deal to most, it is in fact a big deal in the progress of the ministry here. I have been named the unofficial chaplain of my daughter's volleyball club by the parents. I have spent a lot of time over the past few years developing relationships with the parents on trips, at team dinners and at lunches between matches. Quite often we talk about our jobs and what we do for a living. Through those conversations I have been able to share with them what God has called me to do and how I am in the place I am at. Most are shocked when they first learn I am in the ministry. They often say, "You don't look like a minister." To which I will always ask "So, what exactly does a minister look like?" They will always say something like you know, dressed up, perfectly groomed, extremely proper and a certain aura. We always get a good laugh when they learn that is NOT the case with me! Over time we have developed great relationships!

This past trip I had one dad (Andy) ask me if I was mad at the group because they ordered alcohol with dinner. I told him no, why would I be mad at yall.? (As Christians, why do we get mad at worldly people for acting worldly.....that's all they know!)

He seemed shocked at my answer and said oh, I thought Baptist preachers hated everyone who drank. I explained to him I do not drink and don't like the effects alcohol has on people and society but that has no effect on my attitude or feeling towards the person. Later on, Andy told me IF he ever decided to go to a church mine would be the only one he would ever go to. A couple of the other parents heard him and said the same thing. Half-jokingly, I replied "Well seems like I have enough people here to have a service!" One of the mothers then said she would love to hear me speak. I then said since we will all be in the same hotel next trip maybe we can have a short service before we start play for the day. They all looked at each other and said yeah, that sounds good we would be down. Andy then said ok then, that settles it, Chaplain Jack will give us a message at the next tournament.

Please pray for Chaplain Jack and the volleyball team that God will work to open their hearts and minds to the Gospel.
